"Monkey Girl" is a riveting account of the events and personalities involved in the landmark Dover, Pennsylvania trial over the teaching of "intelligent design" in public school science classes. Humes takes you into the courtroom and into the heart of a battle being waged in states and school districts across the nation -- including Kansas.

"When discussing the trial I have frequently found myself saying that to truly understand it, you had to be there. Humes' compelling book accomplishes just that, in that it explains this controversy to the reader in detail. ... [W]e happily now have a definitive and thorough account of what really happened both before and during the Kitzmiller v. Dover trial."

— US District Judge John E. Jones III, who presided over the Intelligent Design vs. Evolution 'Scopes II' trial
